

Embodied Integrity, Shaping Surgeries, and the Profoundly Disabled Child

A presentation by Michael Thomson

Professor of Law & Director of the Centre for Law and Social Justice,
University of Leeds School of Law

Recourse to the value of bodily integrity has become increasingly prevalent in legal studies and decision-making. Notwithstanding this corporeal turn, the value is often accepted with little interrogation of what it might actually mean. This presentation builds on recent work which has sought to develop a richer understanding of bodily integrity, providing a clearer justification for the growing reliance on this jurisprudential value.

Monday, March 27 at 3:30 PM
Emory University School of Law
Room 5E

E-MAIL REZROL@EMORY.EDU TO RSVP

Lite refreshments will be served.

EMORY
UNIVERSITY

Vulnerability and the Human Condition Initiative