

Relational Approaches: Vulnerability and Autonomy in Bioethics

Janet Delgado, RN, MA, PhD

Visiting Scholar, Vulnerability and Human Condition, Emory University

Why is the concept of vulnerability important in bioethics?

This presentation challenges the pragmatic approach on vulnerability to address a relational and universal conception of it.

We will discuss some of the implications derived from this reflection within clinical ethics, such as re-thinking autonomy, professionalism and "asymmetrical responsibility" in healthcare.

Thursday, August 23, 2018 from 4 - 5 p.m.

Center for Ethics, Seminar Room 162

1531 Dickey Drive, Emory University Campus

To RSVP or join us Virtually, click here:

<https://hcecg.org/event-3027259>

Seminars occur every 4th Thursday.
In Nov. & Dec., the 3rd Thursday.